THE COLLEGE OF HEALTH PROFESSIONS
awarded graduate and professional degrees to 162 new alumni on Aug. 10, 2013. On the sunny Saturday morning, students earned their degrees in dental hygiene, healthcare administration, physician assistant studies and professional psychology.

editor'sletter

October has always been my favorite month.

Growing up here in Oregon, I insisted that there was an aroma to the month. The combination of burn piles and chimney smoke, overripe berries and decaying leaves created a sweet and pungent smell that meant fall was truly here. It's time to trade in sandals for boots, T-shirts for sweaters. It's time to take a moment to relax between the endless activity of summer and the bustle of the holiday season.

In an educational environment, fall also takes on special meaning as the beginning of something new. At home, I've loaded up on back-to-school gear and sent my son off to his first day of "big boy preschool." At Pacific, we've welcomed new students and observed the rituals of Orientation, Convocation and Sign, Shake & Ring. We've braved the rain to cheer on the football team, and we've celebrated Homecoming and Family Weekend.

This fall, at Pacific magazine, we're celebrating something else, too. This marks the first issue in our transition to three issues a year. It's incredibly exciting, in an age where conventional wisdom says print is dying, to be able to expand our magazine production and bring you more stories from Pacific University. This issue recognizes the role of philanthropy and giving in the success of Pacific, and it thanks you — our alumni, friends and donors — for making the mission of this place possible. Our spring issue, in late February, and our summer issue, at the end of June, will bring you more stories about Pacific University — about the growth on our campuses, the inspiration of our students, and the successes of our alumni around the world.

JADE WILCOXSON PT '04 discovered a predisposition for diabetes and took up cycling for her health. Since then, she's turned it into a career, becoming the top women's racer in the country.

CORRECTION

There's nothing quite so bothersome to a journalist as discovering a mistake in print.

But it happens.

And so, it is with sincere apologies that I report that Logan Tibbetts-Martin was incorrectly identified in a photo in the Spring 2013 issue of Pacific magazine.

Logan played Charlie Ross, title character of "The Lost Boy," a play written by Sue Mach '86 and performed this winter at the Artists Repertory Theatre in Portland. Logan was double-cast in the role with Agatha Day, whom I misidentified in the picture.

It turns out, Logan also is the son of Pacific University alumna Rebekah Martin '89.

letter from the president

"Please know how much we appreciate all you do to support Pacific University, whether through contributions of your treasure or gifts of your time, as volunteers and mentors to our students."

LESLEY M. HALLICK PhD
PRESIDENT

Our students cannot succeed without you.

Our alumni, our friends, our donors, our parents (and everyone who falls into more than one of those categories) are instrumental to supporting the world of Pacific University and the dreams of our students.

Thank you for your support in this past year and for your continued support in the future.

Last year, we undertook a strategic plan that sets some aggressive goals for our institution. There is a lot of detail in the plan, but the crux is this: We plan to serve 2,000 undergraduate and 2,000 graduate students a year by 2020.

That goal would mark significant, though not unattainable, growth for Pacific University — and it would help us reach a critical mass where we can balance the personal, nurturing learning environment that is so much a part of our identity with the comprehensive and flexible options that the students of today, and tomorrow, are seeking.

Getting there, though, will require help. It is not just about getting more students to apply or accepting more applicants; it is about growing our entire system, from academics to housing to support systems, in a way that attracts, serves and retains a greater number of students in a diverse selection of programs.

Our funding priorities come in three categories:

- ▶ Endowment — Our endowed funds are carefully invested, and proceeds of the investments help Pacific keep tuition affordable for students and also provide specific scholarships, like the Eva C. Krebs Boxer Spirit Award (see page 10) to offset student debt and support student success.
- ▶ Hillsboro Building 3 — The physical growth of Pacific University is necessary to support a growing student population. The third building on the Hillsboro Campus is a key priority in Pacific's long-term plan.
- ▶ Innovation and Opportunities — Growth requires exploration of and investment in new programs and ideas. The start-up of our College of Business, and its first graduate program, were made possible through the philanthropy of our trustees and friends (see page 22). Other future opportunities include upgrades to athletic facilities, new science facilities, the new residence hall (see page 5) and more.

Throughout this issue of Pacific magazine, you will find stories about the difference your gifts make. Please know how much we appreciate all you do to support Pacific University, whether through contributions of your treasure or gifts of your time, as volunteers and mentors to our students.

Warmest Regards,

Lesley M. Hallick, President

New Residence Hall

BY JENNI LUCKETT

REYNOLDS FIELD has been the site of countless memories for Pacific University students through the ages — and it's about to become the home of even more.

FOLLOW | Keep on top of the construction process. ▶ pacificu.edu/newresidencehall

On Oct. 10, Pacific University ceremonially broke ground on its newest residence hall, a 200-bed sustainable living community that will expand the residential options for Pacific's growing student population. Pacific currently serves more than 3,600 students, nearly half of them undergraduates and most of those in Forest Grove. The university expects that number to grow to 2,000 undergraduates and 2,000 graduates by 2020.

Braving a light October drizzle, nearly 100 faculty, staff, alumni and friends gathered during Homecoming to celebrate the groundbreaking. After a brief round of remarks about the new building and the partnerships making it possible, Pacific University Board of Trustees Chair Mindy Cameron climbed aboard a trackhoe to scoop the first loads of dirt from the old athletic field.

The new hall is going up on what was once Reynolds Field, and before that McCready Field, one of the original athletic facilities at Pacific. The field hosted its first varsity match — a football game, which Pacific won — in 1892. It was home to football, soccer, baseball, and even track and field, competitions over the years. In 1991, when Pacific's football program was discontinued, McCready Field became primarily a soccer venue, and in 1993, it was renamed Tom Reynolds Field in memory of the Hall of Fame soccer coach who had recently passed away.

In 2007, though, when Pacific opened Lincoln Park Stadium, varsity sports moved to the new turf field, and when football was reinstated in 2010, it joined them. Reynolds Field went largely unused.

The new 60,000-square-foot, four-story residence hall will benefit from close proximity to the University Center and other residences on campus. It will feature single- and double-occupancy rooms, as well as small suites and flexible spaces for indoor and outdoor events. There will be shared kitchens, study spaces and lounge areas to help students build community, as well as outdoor patios, an indoor/outdoor fireplace, bike parking and environmentally friendly gardens to capture and reuse stormwater runoff.

Planned to open in time for the 2014 Fall Semester, the new hall will be the third built at Pacific since 2006.

PROGRAM GROWTH CONTINUES |

Pacific University continues to expand its programmatic offerings for students with several new undergraduate and graduate degree programs. The College of Business, which opened July 1, will offer a master of science in finance, targeting working professionals with intensive weekend coursework. The College of Health Professions will provide an online program for students and professionals to complete a bachelor's degree in health science. The College of Arts & Sciences is developing a master of social work program, only the second in Oregon, that will be based in Eugene.

And the College of Education is launching a bachelor's in elementary education and English language learning, targeting minority teaching candidates. The new degree will be offered in Woodburn, Pacific's newest campus location, where the College of Education previously piloted a master of arts in teaching Jenny Smythe '90, OD '93, MS '00, dean of the Pacific University College of Optometry, was elected the first woman president of the Association of Schools and Colleges of Optometry. She assumed the presidency at the ASCO annual meeting in June. Since graduating as an optometrist in 1993 from Pacific University, she has held many roles within the College of Optometry. In 2010, she became the first woman elected to the ASCO executive committee. The Oregon Optometric Physicians Association named her Optometrist of the Year, also in 2010.

Christine Guenther, professor of mathematics and computer science, was awarded the prestigious Simons Foundation Collaboration Grant for Mathematicians in May. The goal for the $35,000 grant is to support the "mathematical marketplace" by substantially increasing collaborative contacts in the community of mathematicians working in the United States. Guenther plans to pursue three collaborative projects with the grant.

Hannu Laukkanen '83, OD '84, MEd '94, professor of optometry, received the 2013 Award for the Advancement of Neuro-Optometric Rehabilitation at the Neuro-Optometric Rehabilitation Association's annual conference in April in San Diego. Laukkanen presented a talk at the conference detailing his 2012 sabbatical at Walter Reed National Military Medical Center, where he worked with soldiers displaying vision defects due to traumatic brain injuries. The association focuses on advancing the art and science of rehabilitation for the neurologically challenged patient.

Deepa Rao, assistant professor of pharmacy, was granted a Medical Research Foundation of Oregon New Investigator Award of $40,000, which will support her research project. With these grants, the foundation supports promising new investigators in biomedical research. Principal investigators must be at the beginning of an independent career with a faculty position at an Oregon college or university.

Shilpi Banerjee, director of clinical education for the School of Audiology, was elected to a three-year term on the American Academy of Audiology Board of Directors effective July 1. The American Academy of Audiology is the world's largest professional organization of audiologists, with an active membership of more than 11,000. Banerjee also was awarded "Honors of the Academy" from the Minnesota Academy of Audiology in February in recognition of her outstanding contributions to the organization.

Rich Burk ... the voice of summer

BY JENNI LUCKETT

📺 STACIE STRUBLE '15

It’s even hotter in the broadcast booth, where Burk — “the voice” of the new Hillsboro Hops minor league team — is bringing the fourth home game of the season to life in the minds of radio listeners.

The room still smells of fresh paint, and Burk and his team spend the pre-game and first inning tweaking the sound of their broadcast. The stadium announcements blare in the booth. The open windows overlooking the diamond offer no breeze.

Burk, in slacks and a long-sleeve button-down, appears unfazed, either by the heat or the distractions. On his left, a laptop gives him instant access to Major League gamecasts, weather statistics and broadcast sound levels. Propped on the table in front of him is a spiral-bound book, a complete history of the Hops’ young season, for anyone who can read the markings of a scorecard.

He’s got a yellow highlighter and a pen at the ready, but Burk holds a mechanical pencil in his hand. Years of experience in the booth have taught him to keep his scorecard in pencil, so he can add in notes and reminders, like a player who wants to give a birthday shout out to Mom or Dad.

“The worst part is when you tease something you’re going to talk about in the next inning and then forget,” he says.

After all, Burk says, longtime Pittsburgh Pirates announcer Rory Rowswell is known for saying, “It’s not just the play-by-play that matters. It’s what you say between the pitches.”

Burk takes the advice of such big-timers to heart: Like the wisdom of Red Sox announcer Joe Castiglione, who said it takes four or five hours to prepare to call a basketball game, four or five days for a football game, and a lifetime for a baseball game.

“There’s so much time to fill, so much opportunity for conversation,” Burk says. “I’ve been preparing for this since I was growing up and loving baseball.”

Many of Burk’s peers dreamed of careers as sports commentators, he says. He wasn’t one of them.

“I grew up watching (Hall of Fame broadcaster) Vin Scully because I loved the Dodgers,” he says. “But I never pictured myself in his seat.”

It was John Seeley, Burk's baseball coach at MiraCosta College in Southern California, who first tipped Burk to the idea.

"He suggested I come to Pacific, play baseball, and broadcast football and basketball games," Burk says. "He thought it would be a good career for me."

Burk did, indeed, come to Pacific, and in his first year, he hit a .432 average. Then, he says, he spent the off-season "resting on his laurels" and paid with a lower average the next season. The importance of working hard is just one of the life lessons he attributes to Pacific.

More, though, he says he learned about finding opportunities.

"There are chances to do more at a small liberal arts college than you get at a major university," he says. "At Pacific, when you get there, you can create your own opportunities."

Burk spent his college career studying broadcast telecommunications (a topic that likely would fall into the Media Arts Department today), playing ball for Pacific coach Chuck Bafaro, announcing other sports and getting to know his future wife, Heather Hansen '89.

When he graduated, he spent a season as a No. 2 announcer — and all around assistant — for the Class A Bend (Ore.) Bucks. He'd do a couple of innings of play-by-play mid-game while also stocking concessions and otherwise supporting the club.

"I'd have to go to the Safeway behind the ballpark to get more hot dogs," Burk recalls. "I'd be wearing my Walkman and carrying my score pad, because when I went on in the fourth I had to know what happened."

"It was the worst play-by-play you've heard in your life."

After that first season, he got married and decided he didn't want the market-to-market jumps that are so frequent in a broadcast career. So he spent almost five years working for pro-golfer Peter Jacobsen and helping with the Fred Meyer Challenge golf tournament.

When he did decide to get back in the game, the new Bend baseball team, the Rockies, were looking for a No. 1 announcer.

"By the time I got to Bend, six years after I'd left, I was much better," Burk says.

He spent a season in Bend, then the team moved to Portland, where Burk continued announcing four of its next five years.

In 2001, AAA baseball came to Portland, and Burk spent the next decade as the voice of the Portland Beavers.

The past three years without a Portland team have been rough, but Burk's had the chance to fill in announcing for a variety of sports, including Oregon State baseball. He called a few games at Madison Square Garden and broadcast the 2009 AAA All-Star Game. Plus, he says, he got to coach his son's youth baseball team, which he calls "the greatest thing I've ever done." (The Burks have two children: Madeline, 13, and Dalton, 10.)

But baseball made its way back to Oregon in the form of the Hillsboro

Hops, formerly the Yakima Bears, a single-A short-season part of the Arizona Diamondbacks' farm system. The club sought out Burk for their radio show.

For Burk, it's pretty much the perfect setting.

"This level is great. There are two levels where players are happy to be where they are: in the majors and at this level, especially the guys who were just drafted," Burk says. "It's the first time they're playing pro ball. There's still a sense of innocence."

Plus, he still gets to coach his son's baseball team and stay in the community he's come to call home. The Burks live in Hillsboro but still have close ties to their alma mater, too, with him participating in Boxer Club and the family attending church at the Forest Grove United Church of Christ.

"This is the best possible situation," he says.

And it just goes to show that what Burk loves most about baseball is just as true as his baseball announcing career: "You're never out of the game." ■

Funding a Dream

BY JENNI LUCKETT

Scholarships are what make Pacific University possible for many students. Meet a single mom earning her bachelor's degree in math and the granddaughter of a immigrant farmworker family getting a doctorate in pharmacy.

EVA FORRESTER '14 AND HER SONS count on each other to help out around the house as the single mother works to earn her bachelor's degree in math and finance at Pacific University. The recent award of the Eva C. Krebs "Make A Difference" Boxer Spirit Award is going a long way to making the effort more possible for the family.

Eva Forrester '14 didn't know how she was going to pay for her final year at Pacific University.

Forrester, a 37-year-old student who transferred from Portland Community College, received an academic scholarship to study mathematics and finance at Pacific.

— EVA FORRESTER '14

Eva C. Krebs

boys, 8 and 5, go to school nearby and come to Pacific to hang out after class while their mom studies. Forrester is up front with them about the reality of finances, and the family motto is all about

That went a long way — in fact, it's what brought her to Pacific.

But it hasn't solved her long-term challenge: affording housing, food, clothes and the like for herself and two young sons while attending school full time.

The family lives on the cheap. They stay in the Boxer Apartments, just blocks from the Forest Grove Campus. The teamwork: Everyone pitches in to do chores and help out.

Still, Forrester has been on the brink of dropping out more than once.

Recently, though, she got a piece of good news. She has been awarded the Eva C. Krebs “Make A Difference” Boxer Spirit Award, in honor of the late Pacific University vice president who was so committed to helping students through those rough patches that get in the way of education.

“I was really super shocked to find out I won the award,” Forrester said. “It gave me the boost I needed. It came right on time.”

Scholarships are an increasingly important part of the financial aid package, especially as school loans become a greater burden for students and recent graduates. At Pacific University, donors make education possible for the most in-need students by endowing scholarships, like Krebs’ Boxer Spirit Award. Corporations and foundations also support students with scholarship funds.

Alyssa Tuttle PharmD '15 received scholarships funded by Albertsons and by Walgreens to help her attend Pacific University.

Tuttle grew up knowing a little something about hard work. Her mother was one of nine children in a family of immigrant farmworkers. She managed to go on to Dartmouth Medical School and become a pediatrician.

“She was the one who taught me to work hard,” Tuttle said.

continues ▶

Tuttle started working at 16, taking a customer service job at Target. When that wasn't challenging enough for her, she went to work at Victoria's Secret, where she started in sales and eventually worked up to co-manager. She simultaneously studied full time at the University of California, Fresno, to earn her bachelor's degree.

“Every little bit helps ...
I feel like my hard work is appreciated and these people want to help me succeed.”

— ALYSSA TUTTLE PHARM D '15

Then, she got laid off — and she had to start thinking about what she really wanted to pursue for a career. Her mother suggested pharmacy, and Tuttle spent four months earning her pharmacy tech license (while still in school full time) and got work at a compounding pharmacy while she finished school. Then, she started looking for graduate programs to become a pharmacist herself.

Pacific, she said, was in a beautiful location and offered an attractive three-year route to a doctorate. Plus, she got not one, but two scholarships to attend.

“Every little bit helps. Anything I can do to decrease the loan amount is beneficial,” she said. “And, I've never gotten a scholarship before. I feel like my hard work is appreciated and these people want to help me succeed.”

Getting laid off, she said, might have been a devastating experience.

TWO CORPORATE SCHOLARSHIPS are helping Alyssa Tuttle PharmD '15 pursue her dream of serving patients as a pharmacist.

Instead, “It was the best thing that could have happened to me.”

For Forrester, too, the life changes that led to Pacific were dramatic, but ultimately positive. Her route to pursue an education started when her youngest son was just seven weeks old — and her husband, the boy's father, decided to leave the family.

“I had to think about what I was going to do,” she said.

A minimum wage job may have been more expedient, but it wouldn't have been the best long-term plan for her family. The work is hard, but she hopes that she's inspiring her boys.

“I wish she could be at home a little more. I sometimes miss her,” said her oldest boy, Ethan. “But she goes to school so she can get a good job and get us a better house.”

Forrester said she hopes that someday, when her boys hit that point where they just don't want to push themselves any further in school, they remember what she did.

“When they get to that point, I want them to think, ‘Wait, Mommy did this with me and Brother. I can do it.’” ■

Research Reveals

BY JENNI LUCKETT

The M.J. Murdock Charitable Trust has helped Pacific University launch a significant undergraduate research program, one that is giving students like Tyler Oshiro '13 unprecedented opportunities.

“Cytochrome P450 2A6 purification and mechanism-based inhibition by trans-cinnamic aldehyde” doesn’t mean much to most people. But to Tyler Oshiro '13, it means a lot.

Oshiro, who majored in chemistry with his eye on a career in the health professions, participated in Pacific University’s undergraduate research program, a summer program that puts students to work alongside faculty in their research projects.

“(Dr. Jeannine Chan), who started as my biochem professor, allowed me the opportunity to do research over the summer,” Oshiro said. “She went out of her way to make sure that I was able to gain that experience.”

Undergraduate research at Pacific is possible, in part, because of the M.J. Murdock Charitable Trust, which has given nearly $3 million to Pacific University in the last several years, most in support of undergraduate science and research programs.

The trust, created by the late Jack Murdock, co-founder of Tektronix Inc., provides funding for a variety of community projects in a five-state Pacific Northwest region. In higher education, much of the focus is on the natural sciences and research.

Among other things, the trust gave Pacific funding to ramp up its undergraduate research opportunities in order to join the Murdock College Science Research program — which came with its own grants.

“One of the primary goals is to provide students with opportunities they wouldn’t otherwise have at private universities,” said Brian Hess, senior director of development, corporate and foundation relations at Pacific.

Oshiro came to Pacific on a Pacesetters Scholarship. He wrote a regular column in The Pacific Index, served as student representative on the Board of Trustees, acted with the Theatre Department, and played intramural sports (“mostly for the T-shirts,” he joked).

Research was an added academic bonus: Last November, he attended the Murdock Undergraduate Research Conference, “to present in front of hundreds of students and professors from other schools, all brought together by a common love of knowledge and the pursuit of scientific answers,” he said. Oshiro received the John Van Zytveld Award for Best Paper, an award that came with $500 for him and $2,000 for Pacific’s chemistry department.

Today, the Hawai’i native is still hoping to pursue medical school. In the meantime, he’s working at Intel, in a job another science professor, Dr. Juliet Brosing, helped him find.

“We’re lucky at Pacific,” he said. “Lucky that our teachers do more than see us in the classroom but really care about where we are in life and, more importantly, where we’re going.” ■

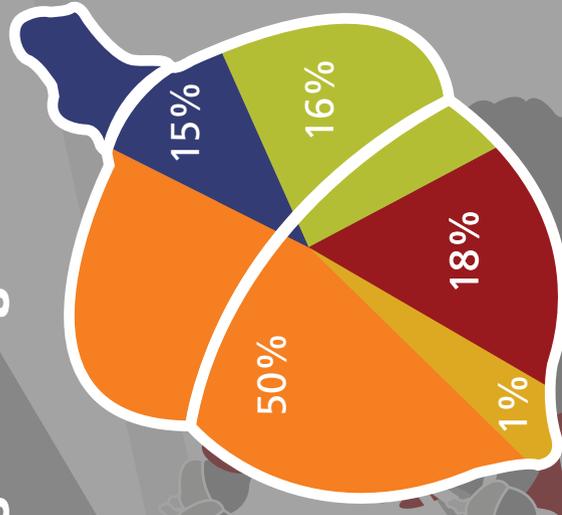

THE MURDOCK COLLEGE SCIENCE RESEARCH PROGRAM GRANT is phased over a three-year period. It enables the university to build a sustainable research program that will eventually be funded without private grant assistance.

We invite you to help us create an endowment to provide ongoing support of the undergraduate research program. The ambitious goal is to secure private gifts of at least $300,000 for the fund in each of the next two years. Your gift will leverage increased support from the Murdock Trust.

You can read more about some of the faculty and student research being conducted at Pacific University in our Spring 2014 issue, publishing in February.

Creating Opportunities

BY JENNI LUCKETT

Pacific University launched Janet Copeland '64's lifelong pursuit of education. When she earned her doctorate at age 65, she and her husband celebrated by endowing a scholarship at Pacific to give someone else the same start.

Janet (Beyer) Copeland '64 was 16 when she came to Pacific University.

She'd started school a bit early and completed two grades in a single year to graduate early from her high school. Then, she set out to find a college as far from her Texas home as possible.

"I wanted to see something different and be away from home," she said.

At Pacific, she found a new world.

"Being at Pacific just opened my thoughts to the whole world of everything," she said.

In the early 1960s in Texas, she had attended an all-white high school.

"Then I went where there were all kinds of races and experiences and other cultures. It was wonderful to meet all these people who had had all these different experiences I had never imagined," she said.

Though she spent less than two years at Pacific, that time changed her.

That's why, when Copeland earned her PhD at the age of 65, her husband decided to honor her — and the beginning of her journey — by establishing an endowed scholarship at Pacific University.

"It was a way to honor her, a way of saying, 'I love you, I'm proud of your accomplishments,'" Phillip Copeland said.

"For her, she was living in a provincial setting and going somewhere with a much better vision of what life was like. We've had many conversations about the good days she had at Pacific.

"I'd like to see other people get the opportunity she had."

Janet Copeland said she and her husband would call themselves "renaissance people."

"Like da Vinci, he did everything under the sun. Except he was really good at what he did and we're not," she said, laughing. "Our approach to life is that you take in everything that you can. It all started at Pacific for me."

As much as she loved her time at Pacific — and she recalls fond memories that range from her freshman class hiding all of the university's silverware in protest of a senior declaration that first-years couldn't eat with forks to experiencing the art, music and writing in Dr. Frank Chipp's western culture class — she left before graduating, feeling a bit homesick and, she said, "tired of school."

She married, worked as an administrative assistant at Southwestern Baptist Seminary in Fort Worth, served as a house mother as her husband worked in the seminary's housing department, and had a son.

When she was 40, she wasn't feeling so tired of school. She started taking part-time classes through the seminary while working, eventually earning her associate degree, the equivalent of a bachelor's degree, then two master's degrees, one in divinity and one in Christian education.

After she retired, she decided to go on for her PhD in administration as that's what she'd done much of her life.

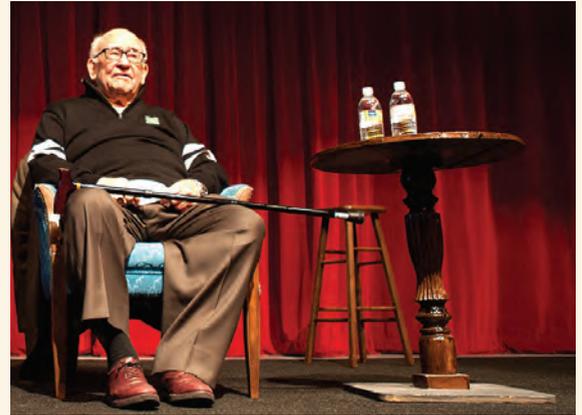

Some people, she said, might celebrate such an accomplishment with a trip. But the Copelands had other plans: "We're all for giving back to further somebody else along the line that we traveled.

"Pacific has always been very dear to my heart. I've given a little money over time but never had very much to give," she said. "Now that we've retired and we're able to get ahold of some of our money ... we wanted to do something to help somebody else beginning the journey."

The Copelands' endowment will fund a scholarship that will support a young woman, preferably from east of the Rocky Mountains, starting her education at Pacific University.

"We're trying to duplicate the opportunities Pacific gave her for people to broaden their horizons," Phillip Copeland said. "You just want to give people an opportunity to take the next step, clear the way so they have chance to better themselves." ■

“Our approach to life is that you take in everything that you can. It all started at Pacific for me.”

ED ASNER IS EXACTLY WHAT YOU'D EXPECT

A little cranky, a little crass, and a lot funny.

In April, Asner brought his one-man show as President Franklin Delano Roosevelt to campus as part of the Performing Arts Series. Before the show, though, he rubbed elbows with members of Pacific's Charles Trombley Society and other invitees at a special reception.

The Trombley Society recognizes donors who make leadership gifts to Pacific University, contributing $1,000 or more in a year. Members receive their own newsletter, discounts at the Pacific University Bookstore and invitations to special events, such as the reception with Asner.

The society is named for Charles Trombley '54, who spent 30 years at Pacific, first as director of admissions and later as dean of students. He was the first recipient of the university's Outstanding Alumnus Award, as well as the eponym of Trombley Square, the central courtyard on the Forest Grove Campus.

With their gifts, members of the Trombley Society demonstrate their commitment to Pacific's distinctive mission, just as Charles Trombley did. Their gifts help Pacific recruit and retain the best faculty and students and continue to offer the rigorous, but nurturing, experience that marks a Pacific University education. ■

Early Returns

‘If you believe in something, you support it with what you have.’ That’s the take of two recent graduates who are now pursuing healthcare degrees and who make it a priority to give back to Pacific University.

Kristen Mathis ’09 and Kihei Castillo ’09 are both givers by nature.

Drawn to Pacific University as undergraduates with dreams of healthcare careers, the young women both pursued helping professions.

Mathis, who came to Pacific from Alabama to swim, majored in exercise science. Castillo, from Hawai‘i, majored in biology.

They both worked as certified nursing assistants at Marquis Care in Forest Grove, and they are both pursuing further experience through the master’s of healthcare administration and healthcare compliance certificate programs at Pacific.

They are both passionate about helping people, about making healthcare more accessible and comprehensive for elderly patients, and for advocating for patient rights.

But that’s not the only way they believe in giving back.

Both young women also began giving, financially, to Pacific University before they even completed their undergraduate degrees.

“I definitely believe you should pay it forward,” said Castillo, who chose Pacific in part because of the financial aid package she received. “A lot of students at Pacific got scholarships.”

As students, they both worked for Phonathon, the program where students call alumni and friends of the university to talk about Pacific and ultimately encourage gifts to the school. It started out as a way to make some extra money between classes, labs and other commitments, but it was an enlightening experience, Mathis said.

“I would hear people talk about how great things were back in the day, and I wanted our class to say that,” she said. “I wanted people to have what I had.”

Finding money isn’t always easy. After all, both women are paying for grad school right now, working when they can and splitting expenses as roommates.

But, they said, it doesn’t take much to help.

“Even a small amount really helps,” Mathis said.

“If you don’t buy a cup of coffee for a day, there’s $5,” Castillo said. “If you believe in something, you support it with what you have, whether it’s time or money.”

“I like what Pacific gave me and what it stands for.” ■

PACIFIC UNIVERSITY LAUNCHED ITS COLLEGE OF BUSINESS on July 1, 2013. The new college offers undergraduate majors in accounting, business administration, finance, international business and marketing, and it begins its first graduate degree, a master of science in finance, in January 2014. The college's opening was funded almost entirely by philanthropic gifts from trustees and friends of Pacific University.

LOOK WHAT CHILDREN IN THE PACIFIC UNIVERSITY EARLY LEARNING COMMUNITY (ELC) are building! These new life-sized blocks, purchased with a gift from Margaret Thompson in honor of her husband, Tommy Thompson '38, are letting the preschoolers and kindergartners in the ELC build new worlds. Thompson also has funded two endowed scholarships and an endowed professorship. Her son, Roger Thompson is a 1967 alumnus, and her great-grandson is a student in the ELC.

DORI CARLSON '88, OD '89 RECEIVED the Kamelia Massih Prize for a Distinguished Optometrist on May 18, 2013. Carlson was the first female president of the American Optometric Association, has been a strong proponent of pediatric vision care and continues to practice with her husband in North Dakota. The prize was named for the late Kamelia Massih, a 1985 Pacific University College of Optometry alumna who passed away in March 2010 following a three-year battle with cancer. Massih's compassion and care for her patients and community exemplified Pacific University alumni.

Celebrating Pacific's Finest

Pacific University honored some of its top alumni in October with the annual Alumni Awards and the semi-annual induction of new members in the Pacific University Athletic Hall of Fame.

MINDY (COTTRELL) CAMERON '65 OUTSTANDING ALUMNI ACHIEVEMENT AWARD

Cameron had a standout career in print and broadcast journalism and has served on the Pacific University Board of Trustees for the last 20 years, most recently as chair. She enjoys continued community involvement near her country home in Idaho.

DEREK '92 AND TINA (COOPER) LASKO '95 DAVID & SANDY LOWE OUTSTANDING ALUMNI SERVICE AWARD

Owners of Lasko Printing, the Laskos have long partnered with Pacific University in business and volunteer work. Derek Lasko is a member of the Boxer Club, the Alumni Association Board and the Athletic Hall of Fame Board, while Tina's volunteer work is closely tied to their sons' school and extracurricular activities.

DR. AMI (HEATON) HALVORSON OD '07 YOUNG ALUMNI LEADERSHIP AWARD

A graduate of the College of Optometry, Halvorson returned to Pacific University to run the Pacific EyeClinic Southeast. She later helped with the design and implementation of the world's first 3D vision clinic at Pacific's Beaverton Clinic, and she has volunteered extensively locally and globally.

DEEDEE ARNALL '06 ATHLETIC HALL OF FAME

One of only two athletes in Pacific history to be named an All-American in two sports: basketball and track and field, Arnall was a three-time All-Northwest Conference selection in basketball and graduated as the career record-holder in scoring average and free throws made and attempted.

DR. FRANK DIERICKX '41 ATHLETIC HALL OF FAME

A stand-out pitcher with Pacific University who caught the eye of scouts and was signed by the Detroit Tigers organization in 1940, Dierickx played five seasons in the minor leagues in between medical school and a two-year stint in the military. He pitched with the Portland Beavers during parts of the 1945 and 1949 seasons while also working as a practicing surgeon.

BILLY MERCK '97, MAED '03 ATHLETIC HALL OF FAME

Key defender on Pacific's outstanding soccer teams of the mid-1990s, Merck was a two-time First Team All-NWC selection, named First-Team NAIA All-Pacific Northwest Region, and an honorable mention NAIA All-American. He is Pacific's career record-holder in assists and played four seasons of professional indoor soccer.

1962-1964 MEN'S TENNIS TEAMS ATHLETIC HALL OF FAME

The men's tennis teams of the early 1960s were three-time NAIA District II team champions, winners of the 1964 NWC team championship with a perfect 13-0 record, and participants in the 1963 and 1964 NAIA National Championships. Team members included Dr. Lund Chin '65, OD '66, Rhody Rodolico '65, the late David Lowe '63, George Long '63, Sandy Farquhar '65, Greg Shay, Jim Horne '66, Geoff Hiscock '66, Skip Cashin '67, the late Gordon Okumoto '68 and Larry Steward.

PACIFIC UNIVERSITY CELEBRATED HOMECOMING FROM OCT. 10-13, with hundreds of alumni returning to Forest Grove and Hillsboro to relive their glory days as Badgers and Boxers. The following are a few highlights of the celebration, and you can find more stories and photos online.

REUNIONS

Almost a dozen classes from the various sections and eras of Pacific University marked the time since their graduations with reunions. Alpha Zeta Fraternity members returned to campus for a reunion, while members of the Gamma Sigma Fraternity celebrated their group's 150th anniversary with a golf scramble and special dinner. Check out a timeline of the history of Gamma Sigma, the oldest fraternity west of the Mississippi.

GOLDEN GUARD

Members of the Class of 1963 were inducted into the Golden Guard with a luncheon and the traditional etching of their names into the concrete sidewalk outside of Old College Hall.

ATHLETICS

Students, families, community members and alumni turned out en masse to support Boxer teams. Included in the long-weekend festivities: Pacific's volleyball team beat Lewis & Clark 3-1 on Friday, and the men's soccer team roused George Fox 2-0 on Sunday. No game was bigger, though, than the football team's face-off against the University of Puget Sound. The Boxers won 56-14, bringing the team to a school-best 5-0 record on the season.

COMMUNITY FUN

Alumni took tours of the newest features on Pacific's campuses, visited Washington County wineries, enjoyed a family outing to a local pumpkin patch, and the annual Noise Parade was a howling good time.

Shirley L. Abbott '52, OD '53

Former U.S. ambassador Abbott died April 23, 2013, of congestive heart failure. He was 88.

An optometrist by trade, Abbott also was a rancher, a politician and served as ambassador to the Kingdom of Lesotho under President Ronald Reagan's administration. He also was a devoted alumnus of Pacific University, where, in 2003, his support established the Abbott Alumni Center. In 2007, he received the Pacific University Outstanding Alumni Achievement Award.

Abbott spent his early years on a tenant dairy farm in Minnesota before moving with his family to El Paso, Texas, where he graduated from high school. He attended what is now the University of Texas at El Paso but left to join the Army during World War II. Following the war, he earned his bachelor and doctorate degrees at Pacific University.

He returned to El Paso, where he was one of the first in the region to fit corneal contact lenses. His optometric practice became one of the largest in the city. In the late 1960s, he started an optical company that later became Sunland Optical, then the largest military optical contractor in the country. He also developed apartment housing and operated farms in New Mexico, Texas and California, as well as one in South Africa with his grandson, Jason. He also was director of several local banks.

In the mid-1970s, he was appointed regional director of the Bi-Centennial Administration. He co-founded the Granaderos de Galvez, which honored the Spanish influence on the development of America. He also traveled to Spain several times as a guest of the Spanish government, was named Honorary Consul General of Spain for Texas and was granted The Order of Isabella La Catolica, the highest honor awarded to a non-Spanish citizen.

Abbott served in the Texas House of Representatives from 1977 to 1978. In 1983, President Reagan appointed him ambassador to the Kingdom of Lesotho, an independent monarchy in southern Africa.

In his later years, Abbott and his wife, Arline, divided their time between Texas and California. He was preceded in death by his wife.
