

Rights and Privileges for Clinical Instructors

We understand that being a Clinical Instructor or Center Coordinator of Clinical Education means giving up a great deal of time and energy for the purpose of educating future co-workers. We greatly appreciate clinical educators' participation in this process, as our education system could not function without this participation! While we are not able to monetarily compensate our clinical educators, we are able to offer the following benefits.

The privileges offered to clinical instructors by Pacific University are as follows:

1. Clinical instructors are offered reduced rates for continuing education courses sponsored by Pacific University. Brochures for courses are sent out as courses are scheduled.
2. Library privileges are available to all clinical instructors for one year from the date they take on a student. This includes use of the physical library as well as e-journals and interlibrary loan services. This privilege is possible because clinical instructors are considered adjunct faculty members.

The rights of clinical instructors are as follows:

1. Right to request assistance from Pacific University in preparing for student internships.
2. Right to request an on-site or phone meeting with CEC during internship if needed.
3. All rights as outlined in the legal agreements between Pacific University and the clinical site.
