Subject: Physical Therapy student - hire for summer work

Hello Mr. Rutt,

I am the mother of a 21 year old young man who suffered a severe traumatic brain injury in 2007. He is VERY positive, he was an incredible athlete and straight A student. He continues to recover but has some right-side physical disabilities due to the left brain injury. We are looking to hire a male PT student to assist us with interaction (social and physical) for the summer – we live in Vancouver, WA. Who, within your department, should I be in contact with?

Attached is some information concerning my son, Ryan Greenen. You can also Google him for more information.

I look forward to hearing back from you!

Ryan Greenen's Journey to Recovery

- January 16, 2007 KATU TV Video: <http://www.katu.com/news/local/5225756.html?video=YHI&t=a>

Here's a quick summary of his injury:

- News clips concerning Ryan's home coming after being in the hospital for almost 5 months:
<http://www.katu.com/news/7323731.html>

Ryan suffered a severe traumatic brain injury (TBI) on January 16, 2007, which left his right side weak and affected speech and motor skills. But the hardest of all his injuries to overcome, which affects life, is short term memory loss. He was hit by a car while sledding at a friend's house (with permission from the friend's father to slide down their driveway – he was following the directions given to him and was told it was "clear to sled"). He was hit by a van and drug approximately 100 feet and sustained a severe TBI and third degree burns to the left side of his face, left ear, left elbow and right chest area as he was pinned under the motor. His head actually stopped the vehicle as snow built up under him.

Prior to the injury Ryan was academically and athletically gifted with a great attitude, just the all American kid with a bright future and an abundance of opportunity awaiting him. He is progressing and regaining slowly the use of his right arm, speech and short term memory - he would like to get "back" as much of his life as possible. He remembers everything prior to the accident!! He knows what he had, who he was, and what his future was promising him – and it was bright! Ryan works hard every day via therapy at home and in the medical facilities with his self-motivation to regain his old life. You can view some information on Ryan by clicking the links below:

Shriner’s Burn Hospital Boston:

Ryan’s skin graft, on his left side of his face, has been troubling Ryan over the past year; Dr. Niknam Eshraghi (of the Oregon Burn Center, who performed the original skin graft) mentioned if Ryan’s skin graft ever bothered him in look, feel or tightness he recommended we reach out to Dr. Matthias Donelan with Boston Shriner’s Burn Hospital. Dr Eshraghi related to us that Dr. Donelan was one of the top pioneering leaders in the field of burn reconstruction.

In May 2009 we sent high resolution photos of Ryan’s skin graft and shared his story with Dr. Donelan and his team; we were permitted a personal visit for consultation with Ryan this past July with Shriners. We flew to Boston and met with Dr. Donelan and his team. It was a great visit with Shriner’s – they were amazing! Dr. Donelan was comfortable, brilliant, and competent - he delivered reasonable choices and Ryan liked his recommendations. The reconstruction goal is to get his face symmetrical. When he smiles, a real smile and not forced, he looks symmetrical – otherwise you can see his face and lower lip pulls down and to the left, if this is not corrected, it will be more prominent as he gets older. The doctor pointed out that none of us have a perfect face but being symmetrical makes people look normal. Currently the redness on his skin graft (do to uncomfortable tightness vertically and horizontally) draws people to look more closely at Ryan’s face and from there people tend to notice the pulling and then the scar. I watch people watch him.... Ryan wants the pulling to stop and wants to be symmetrical. This doctor can help!

We had our first laser surgery last Friday (September 18) in Boston. There is an incredible story behind this too. Many people around the U.S. have offered miles to help, which we did and will continue to utilize. A contact with Hilton National sales assisted us with hotel rooms in Boston too. This is one of 10 to 15 trips we will be taking to Boston every six weeks.

Advice from a recent graduate and Core PT therapist— Edie Sperling, PT, DPT

I <joined Core PT> as a new grad...just weeks after passing my licensure exam. I was chock full of new ideas and information from three years of graduate school and months of clinical internships - but also anxiety about treating my own clients...The therapists and staff at Core PT made the transition from student to professional as smooth as I think is possible. ...I could always find someone to chat to, whether it was knocking on their door during a treatment session for a quick question, or sitting out on the sunny deck during lunch discussing a particularly interesting or difficult diagnosis.

In addition, there was specific time every week set aside for mentorship with Elizabeth Hampton, PT, WCS, BCB-PMD, the owner of Core PT, and the hours counted towards a women's health residency. She was an ideal guide, suggesting topics for exploration that were helpful for my orthopedic clientele, and merging into discussions about women's health, her area of expertise and my particular area of interest.

<Due to a family health emergency> I was not able to spend much time with the wonderful Core PT family...but the three months I was there gave me the confidence to know that I was treating <my clients> with the highest level, most up-to-date care, because of the support I was receiving...the excellent tools at my disposal... and such a warm, welcoming staff and clinic space.

...of all the many clinics I worked at as an intern, and visited as a job seeker, I would recommend Core PT because of the true commitment each clinician brings to their job, the seriousness with which they regard the health of their clients, and their caring souls, which shine through in everything they do.
